Types of Online Communication

Leandro Baroca

Twitter

What is Twitter?

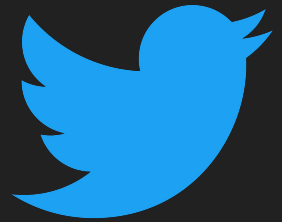

Twitter is an online micro blog which is used for social networking and news.

Users on twitter can post messages which are called “tweets” with a maximum of 140 characters.

Twitter is accessed through a website browser, SMS or mobile app.

Twitter is a very popular social network and it is used by millions of people.

Communication for Twitter

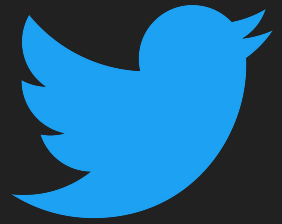

General communication - Terminology - Using the correct words is important because a tweet has a limit of 140 characters.

Interpersonal skills - Summarizing and repeating - Summarising is important so conclusions can be made, but repeating isn't important since the tweet is permanent (unless it is deleted).

Written communication - Spelling and grammar - This is important because of the limit of characters and the people reading your tweet. So proof reading before a tweet is highly recommended.

Barriers of Twitter

Twitter has a limit of a 140 characters -This means that you have to limit the amount you write and choosing others words to use which would fit within the limit.

Internet is required - Twitter can only be accessed through internet connection, if there isn't a connection twitter wouldn't be useful.

Bad users - Other users online can be a barrier online, twitter is a very public website, so the chance of getting spam or a troll is very likely.

Forum

What is a forum?

A forum is an online site where you can have discussions and conversations via posted messages.

A forum can be focused on almost any subject and a sense of an online community tends to develop among members.

Forum differs from chat because it is almost never live but it can be read at any time.

Communication for a forum

General communication - Importance of accuracy - Giving accurate facts is important in a forum discussion because you need good evidence of facts.

Interpersonal skills - Questioning; Open, Closed - Opened and closed questions are important because open questions can have an in depth answer and a closed question can be used to justify an answer.

Written communication - Balanced views shared - Balanced views are important because you can see both sides of the spectrum in a discussion and it reduces the chance of an argument in the forum.

Barriers of a forum

It isn’t live communication - You won't be able to see new posts by other users unless you refresh the forum.

Requires an internet connection - Without an internet connection you wouldn't be able to access a forum.

Bad internet users - Trolls, spam, flame wars and other forms of bad internet users can overtake a forum and have very little or hard to find information.

Group Discussion

What is a group discussion?

A group discussion is when a group of individuals gather either formally or informally to bring up ideas, solve problems or give comments.

Group discussions can take place in person, conference call or a website.

Communication for a group discussion

General communication - Keeping audience engaged - Keeping the audience engaged in a group discussion is very important because you need to have everyone listening to your points in order to make the discussion valid.

Interpersonal skills - Social barriers - Having confidence in a group discussion is important because you need to take part in the discussion and explain all your points.

Written communication - Note taking - Note taking is important if you are the minute taker. The point of note taking is so that the discussion can be evaluated by a staff higher in the hierarchy so that the discussion can make changes in a business.

Barriers of a group discussion

Tone of Voice - A big barrier of a group discussion is your tone of voice, if it isn't loud enough, it wouldn't be heard by other individuals or even the minute taker couldn't hear what you have said.

Confidence - Having lack of confidence around people is a big barrier due to the fact there are a lot of individuals in a group discussion, if you don't have the confidence to speak to a group, you would struggle to contribute.